Landscaping and gardens on Hill Street

The gardens at Roseville Station have been a feature of the local landscape for more than 100 years. Transport for NSW recognises the heritage value of Roseville Station as it possesses largely intact gardens on both sides of the platform. The civic pride which was once associated with the coming of the railways and the station as a major landscape and social element within the community is evident in the garden at Roseville Station, one of very few remaining on the Sydney Trains network.

In 1947, the station was described as a 'floral festival', with hundreds of blooming roses, snapdragons, larkspurs and other plants making Roseville Station a riot of colour.

New gardens installed at the Hill Street entrance to the station will celebrate this proud heritage. Retaining walls with bush rock saved from site have been installed to form new garden beds around the lift shaft. A number of roses have been transplanted to ensure continuity between the old and the new. Additional roses and azaleas will be planted to fill out the remaining beds.
